SERIES OVERVIEW

Stories that open a new way to think.

When an everyday problem feels a little too big, Great Granny knows just where to look: her magical book of stories. Together with Nancy, Eli, and Danny, she steps into worlds of flying inventions, runaway gingerbread, and three very busy little pigs. The adventures are gentle, funny, and full of opportunities to notice, listen, experiment, and try again. Great Granny guides the way, but the children make the choices that matter. Back at home, they put a new idea into practice. Written by Alec Patrick McGinity for ages 4–8 and family read-aloud time, the three Great Granny storybooks pair imaginative journeys with child-sized discoveries.

THE BOOKS

Three adventures. Three little discoveries.

BOOK 1 / ELI

Pip and the Flying Cart

Eli's kite will not stay in the air. A visit to Tinker Meadow introduces him to Pip, an inventor whose flying cart has a wobble of its own. By looking closely, making changes, and trying again, the two friends discover a new way to fly.

Curiosity, teamwork, and trying again

BOOK 2 / DANNY

The Gingerbread Man's Great Escape

Danny's hurry to help with the baking ends in a cloud of flour. Inside Great Granny's magical storybook, a speedy Gingerbread Man is rushing toward trouble, too. Danny's tiny-big idea helps the runaway cookie pause—and gives Danny a discovery to bring back to the kitchen.

Slowing down, listening, and thinking

BOOK 3 / NANCY

The Three Little Pigs' Big Mix-Up

Nancy has a perfect plan for a reading fort—until the roof flops. A windy picnic with three little pigs gives her another chance to lead. When she makes room for everyone's ideas, straw, sticks, and bricks become parts of one shared solution.

THE PEOPLE & THE PREMISE

A family with room for every kind of idea.

Great Granny — The loving guide

Warm, patient, and witty; she chooses a story that sparks fresh thinking.

Nancy — Age 10 · The planner

Thoughtful and protective; she learns to make room for other people's ideas.

Eli — Age 7 · The inventor

Curious and creative; he learns to test, adjust, and try again.

Danny — Age 5 · The little spark

Playful and observant; his tiny-big ideas shine when he slows down.

Story angles for features and interviews

The child makes the discovery

Great Granny opens a story rather than handing over an answer. Each lead child earns the solution through a choice, an observation, or an experiment.

Three children, three ways to grow

Eli tries again, Danny learns to pause, and Nancy listens to different ideas. Each adventure connects a distinct character challenge to something families can discuss.

Familiar tales, gentle surprises

A runaway cookie and three little pigs offer recognizable starting points. The stories favor funny mishaps, puzzles, and cooperation over frightening peril.

PRESS INFORMATION

Questions worth wondering about.

Interview starters

01 Why does Great Granny guide the children rather than solve their problems?

02 How do you connect an everyday family challenge to a storybook adventure?

03 What makes Nancy, Eli, and Danny different kinds of problem-solvers?

04 How did you give familiar fairy-tale ideas a gentle, playful twist?

05 What do you hope children and grown-ups talk about after the last page?

06 How do the illustrations support the story's humor and discoveries?

What makes the stories distinctive?

The children are active problem-solvers. Granny offers warmth and a story; the discovery comes from noticing, trying, listening, or adapting. Gentle mishaps keep the adventures playful while the home ending shows a practical next step.
